ABOUT THE DONOR

The Denver Foundation has been honored to manage the Greenwood Fund for the past decade, supporting small museums in Colorado and Wyoming according to the vision and passion of the fund's founder.

Charles Greenwood Patterson III, known as Carl, was well known in the museum community for his expertise and leadership in art conservation. Throughout his career, Carl lived and breathed conservation, working with numerous museums around the world, and in the Metro area.

Over 18 years at the Denver Art Museum, he outfitted three conservation laboratories, consolidated collection storage, and undertook collection surveys, as well as played a key role in the design and opening of the Hamilton Building. Instrumental in elevating and expanding the conservation department, acquiring equipment, and improving storage, Carl was immensely creative in his ability to write grants and raise funds.

In 2009, Carl retired as Director Emeritus of Conservation. The following year, he created the Greenwood Fund. Carl passed away in February of 2020. Through the ongoing work of the Greenwood Fund, The Denver Foundation is honored to continue his legacy and passion for conservation.
